

Command Chief Master Sergeant (Ret) Hope Skibitsky was appointed Learning and Development Manager for V2X on January 3, 2023, after serving on active duty in the United States Air Force for almost 30 years. V2X serves Defense, National Security, and Commercial communities from the command center to the front lines, by employing operational experience, engaging advanced technology, and delivering managed learning solutions. As the Learning and Development Manager, Hope is passionate about and dedicated to training and development of the organization's 14,000 human weapons systems. She embodies the V2X mission of delivering performance excellence with an uncompromising focus on mission success and she showcases its vision of being committed to operating with excellence wherever the mission leads.

She entered the United States Air Force in 1995 and graduated technical training as an Aerospace Medicine Technician. She served as a Master Military Training Instructor as well as an Air Force Career Assistance Advisor. She earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in Human Resources Management, through Ashford University, a Master Resiliency Trainer Certification through University of Pennsylvania and an Air Education and Training Command Master Instructor Certification.

During her military career, she had three overseas assignments and three deployments; she had multiple Host Wing Command Chief assignments; served as the Command Senior Enlisted Advisor for Joint Special Operations Air Component-Central as well as the Chief of Air Force Basic Military Training. Chief Skibitsky has more than 3,000 platform instruction hours and is a certified facilitator in several professional development training courses.

Her Senior Enlisted Leadership duties included the 60th Inpatient Operations Squadron at Travis AFB, CA; 48th Medical Operations Squadron at RAF Lakenheath, UK; 737th Training Group at JBSA Lackland, TX; 27th Special Operations Wing at Cannon AFB, NM; 86th Airlift Wing at Ramstein AB, DE; and she completed her career as the Command Chief of Air Force Installation and Mission Support Center, at JBSA Lackland-Kelly, TX, serving all Air and Space Force Installations across the globe.

Hope is married to Justin, they have two amazing adult children and they are building their homestead in beautiful small town Texas.
